Additional information

Jiang is an established scholar with extensive research experience in Chinese mainland. She has excellent skills in managing and conducting research projects on China's urban development and planning. Her works have been published on various top-notch journals in geography, planning and urban studies. She specializes in critical urban studies, with a focus on how the Chinese state reinvents its institutions, discourses and practices to meet new governance challenges. As a former practitioner in an international consulting firm with work experience in China and Canada, a professor at CUHK, the immediate past president of Hong Kong Geographical Association, and a policy advisor to the governments of Hong Kong and cities in mainland China, she has excellent contacts across China in general including the Greater Bay Area (GBA).
